PHOSPHORIC LIGHTS. A series of interesting experiments with phosphoric light, under the direction of the Commissioners of Northern Lights, was, says the Scotsman, conducted from their steamer Pharos, in the Firth of Forth. This light, if brought into use, would supersede the ordinary blue light now universally used as danger and other signals in the naval and mercantile services. The phosphorated substance is contained in a tin lamp, holding about half a pint, and before being used a hollow tube at the top and bottom of the lamp is opened. The lamp i then enspended by an ordinary piece of wood which is thrown into the sea. A bright light immediately flashes up, and continues to burn very brilliantly for apwards of three quarters of an hour. The light was also exhibited from the mosthead of the Phares, by placing the lamp in a small can containing water, constructed for the purpose. It is expected that the light will be very serviceable for indicating the position of a life-buoy at night. While the experiments were being made, the Pharos was going at full speed. From the time the lamp and life-buoy were thrown overboard, the engines of the steamer stopped and reversed, and a boat lowered, to the time when the buoy and light were picked up, only three minutes elapsed. Some such apparatus is sadly needed for use by the drivers of railway vans in these foggy, evenings. Whatever may be the state of the atmosphere these vans are always driven at the same rapid pace. When a foot passenger is knocked down by one of them it does not always buppen that he is killed on the spot, he is sometimes fortunate enough to escape with the fracture of one or both legs or his ribs; it is not, of course, to be expected that the driver of the van will condescend to pull up his borses, descend from the vehicle, and personally ascertain the extent of the injuries he has inflicted, but he might throw out a phosphoric light just to mark the spot where the sufferer lies. This would enable the police constable or duty, when in the course of his beat he arrives at the scene of the accident, to drag the injured person to the pavement, where he might lie until he ban be conveyed to a hospital or mortuary on a stretcher.

The Journal de Geneve states that a young bank clerk, who had absconded from St. Petersburg with a sum of 170,000f., has just been captured at the Hotel des Bergues. He arrived there a few days back, and commonced living in great style, giving himself out as a Russian nobleman on his travels. When arrested he had 140,000f, of the sum stolen still in his pos-

Mr. Gray, the Immigration Agent at Brisbane, states in a report made by him to the Government of Queensland on the 6th of April last, that about 4,150 Polynesians have been introduced into that colony since 1863, but that their numbers had been reduced by the return of 1,564 to their native

Such is his report. The practice Promium. of sending a Government agent with every vessel was only adopted at the beginning of the year 1871, and we have yet to ascertain its effect. The instructions of the agents require them to see that no coercion, undue influence, unfair play, false representation, or treachery of any kind is employed; and the agent is "to satisfy himself that the conditions of the enagagement are understood by the labourer" before allowing the engagement to be concluded. But when the Governor of New Zealand, in 1870, asked Bishop Patteson for information relating to the engagement of such labourers, the Bishop wrote :- "The dialects spoken in the islands of the Pacific are almost innumerable. There are no interpreters; men employed by owners of vessels or by settlere as interpreters are quite unable to communicate freely, if at all, with the various islanders. A few sentences of broken English, with here and there a native word imperfectly understood and badly pronounced, are supposed to convey to the native's mind an intelligible idea of what is called a contract. The vast majority of natives taken from their homes have no notion of the distance or character of the place to which they are carried, and of the work they have to do; of the length of time they are to be kept at work each day; of the time, whether months or years, when they are to be brought home, if, indeed, they are taken home at all. A native interpreter (i.e., an islander who has learnt some English, and is used as a decoy to entice away his own people) is invariably an untrustworthy man in the pay of the trader, and ready, with any lying story, to induce natives to leave their home. There is absolutely no means of communication with these natives. I am sure that no white man has set foot on Santa Cruz for many years except myself, and I cannot speak a sentence of their language properly." It must be borns in mind, however, that a distinction is asserted between the trade with Queensland. The Colonial Secretary of Queensland, in transmitting to the Governor the report apprehension exists in England with reference of Mr. Gray, observes that "so much misto the employment of these islanders that he would suggest the appointment by the Imperial Government of a Commission to examine into and report upon the whole subject." Mr. Gray's report was forwarded, Policies issued for long or short periods at with other documents, to the Colonial Office; and the Earl of Kimberley, in a despatch of my lips; if, through that long winter in Spouting Horn a swindle." Here it occurred the 5th of July last, informed the Governor your Government will make provision for the expenses." If anything more has passed upon that subject, it is not in the official correspondence recently issued.
